each mirror is hand gilded and therefore unique - images are a guide only as each piece will vary verre eglomise is silver leaf gilded on to glass • each leaf is laid side by side hence the pattern of squares on the surface • the silver leaf is left to dry, then steamed and burnished in order to enhance the reflective quality of the surface • it is sealed with lacquer to prevent the silver from tarnishing • it is a very time consuming process, but the resulting mirror is delicate and beautiful

gesso and bole is the base usually prepared for water gilding; the technique is centuries old • six to eight layers of gesso, and then three to four layers of bole (which is a mixture of natural earth pigments and gelatin glue) are applied whilst warm • each layer of the gesso, and each layer of the bole is finely sanded, and then the last layer of bole is burnished

due to the complex nature of silvering convex glass there may be a few small specks on the mirror water gilding which is very different from oil gilding, is centuries old and a very time consuming process • a gesso and bole base is prepared; there are six to eight layers of gesso, and then three to four layers of bole (which is a mixture of natural earth pigments and gelatin glue applied whilst warm) • each layer of the gesso, and each layer of the bole is finely sanded, and then the last layer of bole is burnished • it is on to this surface that the fragile leaves of gold are laid • once dry the surface can be burnished with an agate stone • please note that the silver and white gold leaf will tarnish over time as the metal reacts to its environment
